2006/07 Policy Program Series

Air Quality Improvement in the Sacramento Region: Emerging Transportation and Development Practices

The Sacramento region's response to declining air quality will affect future economic growth and our regional quality of life. Land use planning and development practices play an important role in our response to air quality and global warming concerns, particularly when coupled with progressive transportation planning and investment.

Join ULI for this important policy program exploring how our improved understanding of air quality issues could change real estate and infrastructure development in the Sacramento metro area. Specific presentations and topics will include:

- The science of air quality and practical implications for the Sacramento region.
- Emerging policies driving regional and local land use patterns.
(AB 32 and CARB guidance for location-sensitive land uses)
- New building and planning prototypes and practices contributing to reduced vehicle usage. (Sacramento Region Blueprint)
- Promising air quality improvement technologies in development in the Sacramento region.

Featured speakers include:

- Dr. Glennah Trochet, Public Health Officer, County of Sacramento
- Larry Greene, Executive Director, Sacramento Air Quality Management District
- Mike McKeever, Executive Director, Sacramento Area Council of Governments
- Jeff Weir, Air Pollution Specialist, California Air Quality Resources Board
- Brian Sehnert, Senior Architect, SMUD
- Bob Chase, Chief Building Official, City of Sacramento
- Oleg Kaganovich, CEO, Sacramento Area Regional Technology Alliance
- Andy Hargadon, Founding Director, UC Davis Energy Efficiency Center (invited)
- Gary Simon, President, Sigma Energy Group
